Following the presentation, participants were divided into smaller groups called baraza rooms.

In these baraza rooms, delegates engaged in fun ice-breaker games like ‘Two Truths and a Lie’ before diving into deeper discussions. One group examined a compelling case study about a company that developed a cure for a terminal disease, debating whether to sell it at a high profit to the wealthy or provide it affordably for everyone. This led to rich and insightful discussions, allowing participants to share and understand different viewpoints.

The lively debates and thoughtful insights emphasized the complexity of the topic, encouraging students to reflect on their values and choices. The conference fostered global citizenship and mutual understanding, inspiring participants and connecting them to diverse views. The delegates actively engaged and enjoyed interacting with peers, making the conference a highly enriching experience.
